Comfort instead of camping, beach vibe instead of Portaloos! The Rolling Stone Weekender – at last a festival you don't need to recover from!

Let's be honest and face the facts: at the ripe old age of 30+ you no longer feel really good at the big open air events that send hundreds of thousands teenagers and people in their twenties into collective bliss every summer. There are many reasons not to go: starting with the pitying or mocking glances from the - on average at least ten years younger- festival goers, to lower recovery capacities after a night spent in festival conditions. But what can you do if despite a certain number of years on the clock you still enjoy a weekend packed with live music, parties and fun in the company of like-minded souls in the same age group? Or even better: with the whole family. In other words a combination of short break, spa weekend and festival? No problem – the Rolling Stone Weekender is the answer.

The English seaside tradition since the Seventies will fill the German music fans in their thirties with enthusiasm here too on 6 and 7 November: a whole weekend of good music with concerts by some twenty great bands on three stages. But there's more: the readings, sets by famous DJs, parties, a record fair and wine tasting and rock memorabilia stalls complement the live music perfectly. The name of the festival guarantees the quality: Rolling Stone Magazine. The American band "The Flaming Lips" has already confirmed, and the further line-up will be announced shortly.

The Rolling Stone Weekender is organised in the wonderful settings of the holiday resort Weissenhäuser Strand directly on the Baltic Sea beach - not bad ! As you appreciate comfort and that true festival feeling not necessarily needs to include the changing weather and its consequences to the tents or the loo containers and the isomats, the visitors will find modern holiday facilities, cool apartments and many restaurants, cafés and bistros here instead of sleeping bags and instant soups.

All the events are held in a relaxed indoor atmosphere, and if you want to get fit again after a stiff neck from the all night head banging, you can go for a nice walk on the beach or use one of the available spa and sports facilities: sauna, swimming pool, therapeutic baths, oriental medicine treatments and, and....

The Rolling Stone Weekender combines festival fun with the relaxation of a short break – finally a festival that you don't need a few days off afterwards for.

The Rolling Stone Weekender: for all the music fans who are still magically attracted by a festival with like-minded people, but who have outgrown tents, inflatable mattresses and cans of lager.

So many amenities surely come at a price? Of course – but it starts at € 119,- and it not only includes entry to all events, from late afternoon Friday to early Sunday morning, but also up to two nights stay in the holiday camp.

Families will find something for everyone too on the beach, in the tropical pool and with the many child attractions of Weissenhäuser Strand, at your charge.

So, no time like the present - some urgency is recommended: the stylish partying and rocking at Weissenhäuser Strand takes place on 6 and 7 November, but the Rolling Stone Weekender chooses to remain a small but perfectly formed festival: more than 4,500 tickets will not be on sale!

The Rolling Stone Weekender – only the Rock`n`Roll is dirty here!
